Commercial Advertiser. The mind looks through the eyes—those windows of the habitation of the soul.

It is a heavenly mind, while in earthly mood appears to thee. The when it looks through eyes that smile...

A man should pursue in health the same line of conduct he proposes in sickness. Popular pleasure is like a balloon; soon inflated, and soon reduced to nothing.

It is delightful, the philosophy with which we recognize ourselves in the misfortune of our neighbors. The heart from all it loves may sever.

There are two classes of individuals of whom it may be truly said that they are good in their bond—those whose ruin is never broken, and those whose bond is good for nothing.
